----- came to United States two years ago with my family. His parents chose United States as their second home is because they want to provide a better education, better facilities, pleasure environment, and better economic opportunities for their family. ----- was born and lived in Malaysia for 16 years. They decided to move to United States 10 years ago, but, they faced a lot of problems during immigration process, such as documentation, interview, and visa qualification. These problems have delayed them from coming to the United States until two years ago. His family was delighted when they got approved by the U.S. Embassy. June 8, 2015 was their first day and he will never forget when he “inhaled the air in America” for the first time. Once in the US, they were able to get assistance from family that was living here, like finding a house to stay, seeking a full-time job, and most importantly learning English. English was the biggest obstacle in his family’s life. In their country, Malay is the main language. After a few months, he is proud to say that his English has slightly improved, and they can now talk to people with confidence.
