

moved to South Lake Tahoe five years ago from Las Vegas, where he grew up in a rough part of town. It was his exposure to living in such disadvantaged conditions that allowed [redacted] to see firsthand how unfair the criminal justice system can be. These early experiences have affected his educational and career goals. [redacted] currently lives with his father, and they have both worked hard to pay for [redacted] educational expenses while he has attended LTCC. For the past two years, [redacted] has been a work-study student in the Fiscal Services Office at LTCC, where he is a valued employee. [redacted] has also been one of the most involved students on campus. He was a member of Rotaract when it was active at LTCC; he has served as an executive member of the Associated Student Council; and he has been a member of both the International Club and the Performing Arts League. As a first-generation college student, [redacted] is excited that he has been accepted to UC-Davis, where he will transfer in the fall as a Political Science major. He plans to go on to law school, and then begin a career as a public defender, to help the less fortunate in the justice system.
